Within a creative space dedicated to contemporary design, you will enter an environment where material, color, and composition meet in an essential way. Here, you will be guided by Elizabeth in working with eco-resin, reinterpreting the terrazzo technique in a modern key.

An experience that combines creative gesture and aesthetic sensibility, leaving room for your vision.

You'll begin by choosing pigments and fragments, building your palette and defining the balance between colors and shapes. Then, you'll move on to mixing and pouring Jesmonite, observing how the materials combine and distribute in the mold. After drying, you'll work on finishing, sanding the surface until you achieve a clean and balanced result.

During the process, each choice helps define the character of the object, and the result is built through small adjustments.

A contemporary way to experience Milan, connecting with design through material and gesture.
